¹ At the time of trial, the installation was named Fort Hood. On 9 May 2023, the installation was officially renamed to Fort Cavazos.

² The government has reviewed appellant’s Grostefon matters and agrees with the defense appellate counsel that they do not warrant full briefing as an assignment of error. Furthermore, the government respectfully submits that they lack merit. The government recognizes this court’s authority to elevate Grostefon matters deserving of increased attention. United States v. Grostefon, 12 M.J. 431, 437 (C.M.A. 1982). Should this court exercise such authority, finding any of appellant’s Grostefon matters meritorious, the government requests notice and an opportunity to file a supplemental brief addressing the claimed error.

WHETHER THE MILITARY JUDGE APPLIED THE INCORRECT MAXIMUM PUNISHMENT FOR THE ARTICLE 117A SPECIFICATIONS THEREBY VIOLATING THE EX POST FACTO CLAUSE

Statement of the Case

On 14 May 2022, a military judge sitting as a general court-martial convicted appellant, contrary to his pleas, of six specifications of wrongful broadcast of intimate visual images in violation of Article 117(a), Uniform Code of Military Justice, 10 U.S.C. § 917a [UCMJ], and one specification of making a false official statement, in violation of Article 107, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 907. (Statement of Trial Results (STR); R. at 1076). Appellant was acquitted of a specification of failing to obey a lawful general regulation in violation of Article 92, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 892, and a specification of wrongful broadcast of intimate visual images in violation of Article 117(a). (STR; R. at 1076). The military judge sentenced appellant to thirteen months of confinement and adjudged a bad conduct discharge. (STR; R. at 1154).³ On 23 May 2022 the convening authority took no action. (Action). On 13 June 2022, the military judge entered judgment. (Judgment).

³ Appellant was convicted of six specifications of Article 117a, and one specification of Article 107. Appellant was sentenced to thirteen months of confinement for each specification he was convicted of, and the military judge directed that all sentences of confinement would run concurrently. (STR; R. at 1154).

Statement of Facts

A. Background.

Appellant and Specialist (SPC) ██████⁴ met while the two were at advanced individual training (AIT) at Fort Meade, Maryland in February of 2019. (R. at 263). ██████ graduated from AIT in September of 2019, a few months after appellant, and she and appellant entered into an intimate relationship around October of 2019. (R. at 266–75). Over the course of their relationship, ██████ sent intimate visual images of herself to appellant. (R. at 280–82, 288–90, 293–94).

In January of 2020, while her relationship with appellant was deteriorating, ██████ began receiving messages from a phone number she didn't recognize about personal matters, including information about a sexually transmitted disease STD she had previously had, as well as information about her relationship with appellant. (R. at 314). ██████ stated very few people in her life knew about her past STD and her relationship with appellant. (R. at 315).

In February of 2020, ██████ ended her relationship with appellant. (R. at 327). Shortly thereafter, intimate images ██████ had sent to appellant were broadcast on the Instagram social media platform and distributed to her classmates from AIT through messaging applications. (R. at 332–33). ■■■ reported the broadcast and distribution of her intimate images to Fort Meade CID on 3 March of 2020, and a criminal investigation followed. (R. at 333).

B. CID interview of appellant.

On 29 May 2020, appellant was taken to the Camp Arifjan, Kuwait, CID Office for an interview. (App. Ex. V, p. 3; App. Ex. XIV, p. 2). Appellant’s interview began around 1000 and terminated around 0003 the following day, 30 May 2020. (App. Ex. V, p. 4; App. Ex. XIV, p. 2). Ultimately, appellant’s interview lasted more than fourteen hours; however, appellant was afforded numerous breaks to use the bathroom, was provided food and water, permitted to control the air conditioning, and repeatedly asked if he needed anything to make himself more comfortable. (App. Ex. V, p. 4; App. Ex. XIV, p. 2).

1. Appellant was advised of his rights and waived them.

Special Agent (SA) ■■■ was the first CID Agent to speak with appellant during his recorded interview, and the first things that occurred were the completion of a COVID-19 questionnaire, an administrative data sheet, and a rights advisal. (App. Ex. V-D, at 00:01:00–00:21:30).⁵ Appellant was advised of his Article 31(b) rights prior to being questioned, and his waiver of those rights was memorialized on a Department of the Army (DA) Form 3881. (App. Ex. V-D, at 00:17:00–00:21:30; App. Ex. VI-I; App. Ex. XIV, p. 2). Appellant indicated that he understood his rights and affirmatively waived them as he wished to discuss the offenses under investigation with CID. (App. Ex. V-D, at 00:21:00-00:21:30).

2. Appellant’s “invocation.”

Approximately eight-and-a-half hours into the interview, and five minutes into questioning by SA ■■■, appellant stated “I’m gonna [or “Imma”] have to invoke [or “evoke”] on this one. When this is over I’m gonna [or “Imma”] have to pay somebody, because this right here? No this is not, it’s definitely not fair.” (App. Ex. V, p. 6; App. Ex. XIV, p. 3).⁶ SA ■■■ continued the interview. (App. Ex. V, p. 6; App. Ex. XIV, p. 3).

3. Appellant terminates the interview without any invocation.

Appellant was informed during his rights advisal that he was free to stop answering questions or request to speak with an attorney at any time. (App. Ex. V-D, at 19:30–20:30). Ultimately, appellant informs SA ■■■ that he is tired and confirms that he would like to stop the interview for the night. (App. Ex. V-F, at 3:07:00–03:08:30). Appellant’s request to stop the interview does not involve any invocation of a specific right, rather he tells SA ■ that he is tired and states “If you want, I can come back tomorrow no problem.” (App. Ex. V-F, at 03:07:40–03:07:50).

C. Appellant’s Samsung Galaxy S-9 cell phone.

1. CID obtained a magistrate authorization for appellant’s cellphone.

On 26 May 2020, CID obtained a magistrate authorization to search appellant’s workspace and quarters for his cell phone. (App. Ex. XIV, p.3). On 29 May 2020, CID Agents conducted their search of appellant’s quarters, they located a Samsung Galaxy S-9 phone [appellant’s cell phone] on appellant’s bed. (App. Ex. V-F, 00:23:30–00:24:00). Appellant had provided his iPhone to CID but failed to disclose that he had a second cell phone. (App. Ex. V-F, 00:23:30–00:24:00; App. Ex. VI-J). On 29 May 2020, CID obtained a subsequent magistrate authorization to search the contents of the seized cell phones.⁷ (App. Ex. VI-L).

2. Appellant consented to the search of his cellphone.

In response to SA ■’s statement that CID might have to search the phone, without being asked any question, appellant stated “You can search it.” (App. Ex.

⁷ The initial Magistrate Authorization was amended to reflect the recovery of more than one cell phone, but the facts supporting the 29 May 2020 Magistrate Authorization were otherwise identical to the 26 May 2020 Magistrate Authorization. The government would highlight that fact as it demonstrates none of the investigative activity that took place on 29 May 2020 was used to support the request to search appellant’s cell phone beyond its physical discovery.

V-F, 00:24:00–00:24:30). Forty minutes after appellant consented to the search of his cell phone he is asked if he would be willing to provide the password/pin, and appellant provides the pin to SA [REDACTED] immediately. (App. Ex. V-F, 01:06:40–01:07:00).

D. Testimony of SA [REDACTED] regarding digital forensic examination.

At the motions hearing on appellant’s motion to suppress, the government presented testimony from SA [REDACTED], the primary digital forensic examiner involved in the investigation of appellant’s case. (R. at 171–72). SA [REDACTED] discussed the technology available for the examination of appellant’s cell phone and indicated that absent appellant providing the pin/password for the phone, CID still would have been able to obtain its contents. (R. at 173). During the examination of the issue, the military judge questioned SA [REDACTED] in order to clarify the capabilities of the technologies involved:

[MJ] Had you not had a PIN number, could -- could you have accessed this phone?

[SA [REDACTED]] Yes, Your Honor, I would have coordinated with our brigade level echelon.

[MJ] Okay.

[SA [REDACTED]] Who -- they possess the higher echelon tools, coordinated with them and sent it to them. They would have conducted an extraction and then mailed it back to us, Your Honor.

(R. at 175–76). SA ■■■, prior to the motions hearing, confirmed the capabilities of the software at the time in which the extraction occurred. (App. Ex. VI-N).

Assignment of Error I

WHETHER THE MILITARY JUDGE ABUSED HIS DISCRETION IN DENYING APPELLANT’S MOTION TO SUPPRESS STATEMENTS AND DERIVATIVE EVIDENCE

Standard of Review

Appellate courts review a military judge’s ruling on a motion to suppress evidence for an abuse of discretion. United States v. Leedy, 65 M.J. 208, 212 (C.A.A.F. 2007) (internal citations omitted). “Findings of fact will not be overturned unless they are clearly erroneous or unsupported by the record. Conclusions of law are reviewed de novo.” United States v. Reister, 44 M.J. 409, 413 (C.A.A.F. 1996). Further, a military judge abuses his discretion when his “findings of fact are clearly erroneous or if his decision is influenced by an erroneous view of the law.” Id. (citations omitted). “In reviewing a ruling on a motion to suppress, [appellate courts] consider the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party.” United States v. Monroe, 52 M.J. 326, 330 (C.A.A.F. 2000) (citing Reister, 44 M.J. 419) (internal quotations omitted)).

Law

A. Miranda, Fifth Amendment, and Article 31(b) rights.

1. Required warnings.

The Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States “commands that no person ‘shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.’” Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 461 (1966) (quoting Bram v. United States, 168 U.S. 532, 542 (1897)). In Miranda, the United States Supreme Court held that “when an individual is taken into custody or otherwise deprived of his freedom by the authorities in any significant way and is subjected to questioning, the privilege against self-incrimination is jeopardized.” Id. at 478–79 (emphasis added).

Prior to an interrogation, military law enforcement officials, and civilian officials acting on their behalf, are required to provide various rights warnings to servicemembers suspected of misconduct irrespective of custody. United States v. Delarosa, 67 M.J. 318, 320 (C.A.A.F. 2009)(citing Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966); United States v. Tempia, 37 C.M.R. 249, 257 (C.M.A. 1967); U.S. Const. amend V; Art. 31(b), UCMJ and Military Rule of Evidence [Mil. R. Evid.] 305(b)(1) and 305(c)).

2. Waiver.

Mil. R. Evid. 305(e) permits a person to waive their rights against self-incrimination and make a statement to law enforcement. The waiver must be “made freely, knowingly, and intelligently” and the person waiving their rights “must affirmatively acknowledge that he or she understands the rights involved, affirmatively decline the right to counsel, and affirmatively consent to making a statement.” Mil. R. Evid. 305(e)(1). The CAAF explained “there are two branches to the waiver analysis. First, was the waiver voluntary? And, second, was the waiver knowing and intelligent?” United States v. Mott, 72 M.J. 319, 330 (C.A.A.F. 2013) citing Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 483–84 (1981).

3. Invocation.

In Edwards, the United States Supreme Court held that if a suspect invokes their right to remain silent or their right to counsel at any time, law enforcement officers must immediately cease questioning until counsel is present. Edwards, 451 U.S. at 484–85. Similarly, Mil. R. Evid. 305(c)(4) directs questioning must cease immediately if a person chooses to exercise their right against self-incrimination, and if a person exercises their rights under the Fifth or Sixth Amendments of the Constitution, questioning must cease until counsel is present.

“While no particular words or actions are required to exercise one’s Fifth Amendment right to silence, . . . its invocation must be unequivocal before all questioning must stop.” United States v. Sager, 36 M.J. 137, 145 (C.M.A. 1992). Put another way, “[i]f a suspect provides an ambiguous statement regarding [the] invocation” of any of his or her rights after the proper warnings, law enforcement officials are not obligated to stop the interrogation. Delarosa, 67 M.J. at 320.

While officials may attempt to clarify the issue, they are not required to do so. Id. (citing Davis v. United States, 512 U.S. 452, 461–462 (1994)) (noting that the U.S. Supreme Court has “decline[d] to adopt a rule requiring officers to ask clarifying questions. If the suspect’s statement is not an unambiguous or unequivocal request for counsel, the officers have no obligation to stop questioning him.”)

To assess whether a suspect’s invocation of rights is unambiguous, a court must determine if the invocation was “sufficiently clear that a reasonable [law enforcement official] in the circumstances would understand the statement” to be an assertion of the right to remain silent. Delarosa, 67 M.J. at 324 quoting Davis, 512 U.S. at 459. Consideration of events “immediately preceding, as well as concurrent with, the invocation” is appropriate in addressing the issue of ambiguity. Delarosa, 67 M.J. at 324 (citations omitted).

B. Voluntariness.

To determine if a statement is given voluntarily or not, a court must ask if the confession is the “product of an essentially free and unconstrained choice by its maker” or if an accused’s “will has been overborne and his capacity for self-determination critically impaired.” Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 225 (1973) (quoting Culombe v. Connecticut, 367 U.S. 568, 602 (1961)); United States

v. Bubonics, 45 M.J. 93, 95 (C.A.A.F 1996). In answering this question, courts must assess “the totality of all the surrounding circumstances—both the characteristics of the accused and the details of the interrogation.” Schneckloth, 412 U.S. at 226; Bubonics, 45 M.J. at 95. Factors to consider include the age and education of the accused, the lack of advice as to constitutional rights, the length of the detention, the nature of the questioning, and punishment such as the deprivation of food or sleep. Schneckloth, 412 U.S. at 226.

C. Derivative evidence and inevitable discovery.

When an accused timely challenges the voluntariness of their statement, evidence derived from that statement will not be admitted unless the military judge finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the statement was voluntary, the evidence was not obtained by use of the accused’s statement, or the evidence would have been obtained even if the statement had not been made. Mil. R. Evid. 304(b). The prosecution must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, ““that when the illegality occurred, the government agents possessed, or were actively pursuing, evidence or leads that would have inevitably led to the discovery of the evidence and that the evidence would inevitably have been discovered in a lawful manner had not the illegality occurred.”” United States v. Hoffmann, 75 M.J. 120, 124–25 (C.A.A.F. 2016) quoting United States v. Dease, 71 M.J. 116, 122 (C.A.A.F. 2012).

Argument

A. The military judge did not abuse his discretion in denying appellant's motion to suppress.

1. Appellant freely, knowingly, and intelligently waived his rights.

Appellant at trial, and again on appeal, did not challenge his waiver of his Miranda, Fifth Amendment, and Article 31(b) rights. (App. Ex. V, p. 5; App. Ex. XIV, p. 7 n. 6). Nonetheless, the military judge addressed appellant's waiver in his ruling and as a conclusion of law found appellant "knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived both his Article 31(b) and Miranda rights." (App. Ex. XIV, p. 7). The military judge's finding was supported by evidence before the court, specifically the portion of appellant's CID interview where appellant is informed of his rights and the subsequent completion of a DA Form 3881 where appellant waived his rights to remain silent and right to counsel and indicated he wished to speak with law enforcement. (App. Ex. V-D, at 17:00–21:30; App. Ex. VI-I)

2. Appellant did not invoke his rights.

In reviewing appellant's claim that he unambiguously and unequivocally invoked his right to remain silent and his right to counsel, the military judge had the benefit of the entire fourteen hour recorded interview being offered by appellant. (App. Ex. V; App. Ex. XIV; R. at 119–20). The military judge's factual findings are entirely consistent with those offered in appellant's motion to suppress, and the military judge performed his analysis of the statement in question using the suggested transcription offered by appellant. (App. Ex. V; App. EX. XIV). Addressing the motion in the light most favorable to appellant, the military judge still found appellant's statement was not an unambiguous and unequivocal invocation of his right to remain silent or his right to counsel. (App. Ex. XIV).

In Gracia, this Court held an appellant's invocation was ambiguous when he responded by saying "Stop" during a CID Agent's questioning. United States v. Gracia, ARMY 20170171, 2019 CCA LEXIS 461 (Army Ct. Crim. App. 18 Nov 2019) (mem. op.). This Court found the military judge did not abuse his discretion in denying appellant's motion to suppress and agreed with the military judge's finding that the appellant's invocation was "an ambiguous statement at best." Id. at *6–7. This Court further held, in accordance with Davis, the CID Agent had no obligation to stop questioning the appellant. Id. at *7 (citing Davis, 512 U.S. at 461–62). Applying that same analysis, this Court should arrive at the same result in its review of appellant's claim.

In the instant matter, the military judge began by examining the plain language of the statement appellant asserted was his "invocation," and noted "the [appellant's] actual words at issue are ambiguous on their face." (App. Ex. XIV, p. 8). Moving through the analysis, the military judge noted additional ambiguity in appellant's statements as they lacked specificity to establish what right, if any, appellant was invoking. (App. Ex. XIV, p. 8). In concluding his analysis, the military judge noted the use of the future tense in appellant's alleged invocation compounded the ambiguity as it "fails to demonstrate his present desire to do something." (App. Ex. XIV, p. 8). The military judge properly found it was not sufficiently clear that a reasonable law enforcement officer in these circumstances would understand appellant's statement to be an assertion of the right to remain silent or the right to counsel. (App. Ex. XIV, p. 8).

B. Appellant's statements to CID were voluntary.

The military judge found by a preponderance of the evidence that appellant's statements throughout the entire CID interview were voluntary. In arriving at this conclusion, the military judge relied entirely on facts supported by the record which here included his ability to personally observe appellant for the duration of the CID interview. The military judge methodically applied the facts from the record to the applicable legal standards, and this Court should find his conclusions of both fact and law do not constitute an abuse of discretion or incorrect application of the law.

The military judge, in accordance with Breshanen and Schelnock, properly examined the issue of voluntariness. As outline by Breshanen, the military judge was required to examine "the mental condition of the accused; his age, education, and intelligence; the character of the detention, including the conditions of the questioning and rights warning; and the manner of the interrogation, including the length of the interrogation and the use of force, threats, promises, or deception.”

Bresnahan, 62 M.J. at 141. In his ruling, the military judge reasoned:

Based upon the totality of the circumstances of all the facts in this case, the Accused's statements to CID were voluntary. According to his Army Reserves Record Brief, when he made the statements to CID, the Accused was a 31-year old Staff Sergeant, high school graduate, had served for over 10 years, and had deployed twice in his career. Moreover, the Accused had completed 31 hours of college credit along with numerous Army courses such Army basic training, Advanced Individual Training (AIT), and the 12 week basic photographic course.

Furthermore, the Court concludes that there is no evidence that Accused was not of average intelligence, could not read and write, or was mentally impaired. Moreover, the Accused's actions and statements throughout the entire interrogation clearly demonstrate his statements were voluntary. He made numerous statements indicating he wanted to clear his name and wanted to cooperate with CID. Finally, aside from the short time SA [REDACTED] became more animated and confrontational during the questioning of the Accused, all of the CID agents involved treated the Accused fairly and were cordial to him. They gave him numerous opportunities to take bathroom breaks, provided him a meal, and even allowed him to control the temperature controls for the air conditioner in the interview room.

(App. Ex. XIV, p. 8–9). The military judge recognized the CID interview, associated breaks withstanding, lasted for fourteen hours; nonetheless, the military judge noted appellant continued to participate and made no effort to terminate the interview. (App. Ex. XIV, p. 8 n. 8).⁸ The military judge in discussing the length of the interview with the parties during at the outset of the motions hearing also noted, “I watched the video and my impression was there’s a lot of dead time where the accused is just sitting in an office[.]” (R. at 119).

Appellant, in contrast to his motion to suppress, narrows his argument with respect to why his statements were involuntary. (App. Ex. V, p. 11–21; Appellant’s Br., p. 23–25). Appellant’s sole basis for challenging the voluntariness of his statements rests on this court finding he unambiguously invoked his right to remain silent or his right to counsel. (Appellant’s Br., p. 23–25). The government’s burden was to show by a preponderance of the evidence that appellant’s statements were voluntary, and there was an abundance of evidence before the military judge which assisted in his determination.

C. Assuming arguendo appellant did invoke his rights, and his statements became involuntary, the contents of his cellphone are still admissible.

This court should find the military judge’s ruling on the issue of inevitable discovery was proper. CID obtained consent for the search of appellant’s cell phone and requesting the pin/password was a logical step in the execution of that consent-based search. Nonetheless, should this court not find the instant facts analogous with Robinson, the government demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that if appellant's statements following his "invocation" were suppressed, the contents of his cell phone would have been inevitably discovered. United States v. Robinson, 77 M.J. 303, 306 (C.A.A.F. 2018).

1. Appellant consented to the search of his cell phone.

Appellant was advised by SA [REDACTED] that during a search of his quarters they had located a second cellphone on his bed. Appellant denied the existence of a second cell phone prior to one being recovered from his living quarters, and when SA [REDACTED] confronted appellant about it appellant volunteered his consent for the search and provided the phone's pin/password shortly thereafter. (App. Ex. V-F, 00:20:00–00:24:30, 01:06:40–01:07:00).

[SA [REDACTED]]: I am now giving you another chance to tell me before we have to go even farther and search the phone...

[Appellant]: You can search it.

(App. Ex. V-F, 00:24:00–00:24:22). Notably, appellant provided consent to search his phone without even being asked for it.

In Robinson, the CAAF held that when an investigator asked for consent to search the appellant's cell phone after the appellant invoked his right to counsel, there was no violation of his Article 31 or Fifth Amendment rights. Robinson, 77 M.J. at 306. The CAAF further held that the subsequent request for the passcode “was merely a natural and logical extension of the first permissible inquiry. Id. In its reasoning, the CAAF encompasses the right against incrimination and right to counsel as one for the purpose of interpreting the “consent to search exception of Edwards.” Id. at 306–07.

Appellant providing consent for the search of his phone and then the passcode, present analogous facts to those in Robinson and fit entirely in the cited “consent to search exception of Edwards.” Id. Even if this court finds appellant invoked his right against self-incrimination, or his right to counsel, appellant providing consent to search his phone and his passcode were lawful pursuant to Robinson.

2. The government demonstrated the contents of appellant’s cellphone would have been inevitably discovered.

The government seized appellant’s cell phone and were granted authorization to search it by a magistrate authorization that preceded appellant’s alleged invocation and offer of consent. (App. Ex. VI-L; App. Ex. XIV, p. 9). Appellant did not challenge whether the magistrate authorization lacked probable cause prior to trial and does not suggest any such shortcoming here on appeal.

In Beck, the Air Force Court of Criminal Appeals held that testimony from an Air Force Office of Special Investigations (AFOSI) Agent that he would have “pursued every available option to gain access” to the appellant’s phone was a sufficient showing from the government to establish the contents of that phone would have been inevitably discovered. United States v. Beck, ACM 39793, 2021 CCA LEXIS 186, at *40 (A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 21 Apr 2021) (mem. op.) review denied, 81 M.J. 449 (C.A.A.F. 2021). The appellant highlighted “the AFOSI detachment lacked the capability to access locked phones, and at that time AFOSI did not communicate with DFC, Cellebrite, or DC3/CFL about whether those entities could access the phone in June 2017, and therefore, there was a possibility that a UFED extraction to recover the Snapchat messages would not have been successful.” Nonetheless, the court found the military judge did not abuse her discretion in finding the government had demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that it had the capability of accessing the contents of the phone. Id. at *39.

In the instant case, the government presented clear testimony from SA [REDACTED] about the capabilities of the Cellebrite Software available and how appellant’s cell phone would have been accessible using that software regardless of whether appellant had provided the pin/password or not. (R. at 173–76). The government also offered email correspondence which demonstrated SA [REDACTED] contacted Cellebrite to confirm the available software would have been capable of extracting the contents of appellant’s cell phone at all relevant times in the investigation. (App. Ex. VI-N). As such, this court should find the government demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that the contents of appellant's cell phone would have been inevitably discovered.

Assignment of Error II

WHETHER THE MILITARY JUDGE APPLIED THE INCORRECT MAXIMUM PUNISHMENT FOR THE ARTICLE 117A SPECIFICATIONS THEREBY VIOLATING THE EX POST FACTO CLAUSE

Additional Facts

After findings were announced, appellant's trial defense counsel raised the issue of what the appropriate maximum punishment was for the specifications of Article 117a, UCMJ, citing the fact that Executive Order 14,062 setting the maximum punishment authorized for the offense was issued after all charged misconduct. (R. at 1081–86; Executive Order [EO] 14,062, 87 Fed. Reg. 4,763 (January 31, 2022)). Appellant's charged misconduct occurred between March and May 2020. (STR; Charge Sheet).

Appellant argued at trial, consistent with his argument here on appeal, that the maximum punishment authorized for each of the specifications of Article 117a should be four months of confinement and forfeiture of two-thirds pay. (Appellant's Br., p. 36; R. at 1081–84). Over appellant's objection, the military judge relied on EO 14062. (R. at 1130). Appellant was sentenced to thirteen months confinement, reduction to E-1, and a bad conduct discharge. (R. at 1154).

Standard of Review

Whether a military judge incorrectly determined the maximum punishment authorized for an offense if a question of law this Court reviews de novo. United States v. Beaty, 70 M.J. 39, 41 (C.A.A.F. 2011).

Law

A violation of the Ex Post Facto Clause occurs when a new law increases the maximum penalty for a crime and is then applied retroactively to criminal misconduct that preceded it. United States v. Busch, 75 M.J. 87, 91 (C.A.A.F. 2016).

When punishment for an offense is not annotated in Part IV of the MCM, there are three courses of action available to determine the appropriate maximum punishment. The first course of action is using closely related offenses under the UCMJ. R.C.M. 1003(c)(1)(B)(i). The second course of action is finding closely related offense under the United States Code. R.C.M. 1003(c)(1)(B)(ii). The third course of action, when there are no analogous offenses under the UCMJ of federal law, is to examine customs of the service. R.C.M. 1003(c)(1)(B)(ii).

A military judge must determine the appropriate term of confinement for each specification an accused is convicted of, and when confinement is imposed for more than one specification the military judge shall determine whether the terms of confinement run consecutively or concurrently. R.C.M. 1002(d)(2)(A)– (B). All punishments other than confinement or a fine are part of the accused's "unitary sentence" and the military judge does not segment those punishments during findings. R.C.M. 1002(d)(2)(C).

When an accused is convicted of two or more specifications, and none of the specifications themselves authorize a punitive discharge, a bad-conduct discharge may be imposed when the total confinement for those offenses is six months or more. R.C.M. 1003(d)(3). This provision has been referred to as the "escalator clause." See generally United States v. Stevens, 75 M.J. 548 (N.M. Ct. Crim. App. 2015).

Argument

Under the facts of this case, the military judge's reliance on EO 14062 violated the Ex Post Facto Clause; however, based upon appellant's segmented sentence and R.C.M. 1003(d)(3), it is clear the error is harmless. Appellant asserts the maximum punishment for his convictions under Article 117a should have been four months of confinement and two-thirds forfeiture of pay. (Appellant's Br., p. 36). Assuming arguendo that appellant is correct, the error is clearly harmless.⁹ . Appellant's sentence for violation of Article 107 was thirteen months of confinement to be served concurrently with the confinement for all violations of

Article 117a. Incorporating appellant's suggested framework, the maximum punishment authorized by law would have been seven years confinement, reduction to E-1, total forfeiture, and a dishonorable discharge.¹⁰ Given the confinement for appellant's convictions of Article 117a did not exceed that for appellant's conviction of Article 107, he has suffered no prejudice.

In addition to confinement, the military judge sentenced appellant to a bad-conduct discharge. (STR; R. at 1154). A dishonorable discharge was authorized for appellant's Article 107 conviction, and a bad-conduct discharge was authorized for the multiple Article 117a convictions pursuant to R.C.M. 1003(d)(3). MCM, pt. IV, ¶ 41.d.(1); R.C.M. 1003(d)(3). Appellant's punitive exposure, as it pertains to the punitive discharge, was not impacted by the military judge's reliance on the EO. Appellant does not challenge or request reassessment of the unitary, or "non-segmented," portion of his sentence. As such, this court should find the military judge did not err by directing appellant receive a bad-conduct discharge.

This court should not hold appellant's sentence incorrect on the grounds of an error of law when appellant has suffered no material prejudice to any substantial right. See Article 59(a), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 859. Appellant's aggregate sentence for all of his convictions, along with his bad-conduct discharge, falls well within the maximum punishment authorized for a single specification of Article 107. As such, reassessment of appellant's sentence is not warranted.

Conclusion

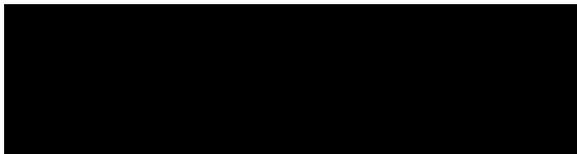

WHEREFORE, the government respectfully requests this honorable court deny appellant's request for relief and affirm the findings and sentence.

Case Summary

Overview

HOLDINGS: [1]-The military judge did not err in denying a defense motion to suppress evidence under the Fourth Amendment because the military judge did not abuse her discretion by finding the Government demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that digital forensics investigator would have inevitably discovered the contraband on the service member's phone during the 28 March 2018 search; [2]-The service member's speedy trial rights under the Sixth

Amendment and R.C.M. 707 were not violated because taking into account the excluded time, only 103 days elapsed between referral of charges and the service member's arraignment, well within the 120-day period of the rule.

Outcome

Findings and sentence affirmed.

An appellate court reviews a military judge's ruling on a motion to suppress for an abuse of discretion, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. A military judge abuses her discretion when: (1) her findings of fact are clearly erroneous; (2) she applies incorrect legal principles; or (3) her application of the correct legal principles to the facts is clearly unreasonable. The abuse of discretion standard is a strict one, calling for more than a mere difference of opinion. The challenged action must be arbitrary, fanciful, clearly unreasonable, or clearly erroneous.

HN2 [↓] Harmless & Invited Error, Constitutional Rights

On direct review, an appellate court applies the clear law at the time of appeal, not the time of trial. Where an error is of constitutional dimensions, an appellate court must conclude the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt in order to affirm the result. An error is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt when it did not contribute to the verdict.

Servicemembers are generally entitled to the protections of the Fifth Amendment. The Fifth Amendment provides that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. U.S. Const. amend. V. As the circumstances surrounding in-custody interrogation can operate very quickly to overbear the will of one merely made aware of his privilege by his interrogators, the right to have counsel present at the interrogation is indispensable to the protection of the Fifth Amendment privilege. Once a suspect in custody has expressed his desire to deal with the police only through counsel, he is not subject to further interrogation by the authorities until counsel has been made available to him, unless the accused himself initiates further communication. Mil. R. Evid. 305(e)(3).

Mere speculation and conjecture is not enough. This exception is only applicable when the routine procedures of a law enforcement agency would inevitably find the same evidence.

The Fourth Amendment guarantees the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated. U.S. Const. amend. IV. It requires warrants and search authorizations to particularly describe the place to be searched and things to be seized so that the search will be carefully tailored to its justifications.

Criminal Law & Procedure > Search & Seizure > Search Warrants > Particularity Requirement

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Warrants

HN7 [↓] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

The Fourth Amendment requires that a search warrant describe the things to be seized with sufficient particularity to prevent a general exploratory rummaging in a person's belongings. However, the proper metric of sufficient specificity is whether it was reasonable to provide a more specific description of the items at that juncture of the investigation. It is folly for a search warrant to attempt to structure the mechanics of the search and a warrant imposing such limits would unduly restrict legitimate search objectives.

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice > Search & Seizure > Unlawful Search & Seizure

HN9 Search & Seizure, Probable Cause

Under Mil. R. Evid. 315(f)(1), a military search authorization must be based upon probable cause. Probable cause exists when there is a reasonable belief that the person, property, or evidence sought is located in the place to be searched. Mil. R. Evid. 315(f)(2). Reasonable minds frequently may differ on the question whether a particular affidavit establishes probable cause, and we have thus concluded that the preference for warrants is most appropriately effectuated by according great deference to a magistrate's determination. Close calls will be resolved in favor of sustaining the magistrate's decision.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

HN10 Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

A search authorization should not be found invalid by analyzing the underlying affidavit in a hypertechnical, rather than a commonsense, manner. The ultimate touchstone of the Fourth Amendment is reasonableness. In assessing the reasonableness of a search, we weigh the degree of the intrusion on the person's privacy against the degree to which the search promotes a legitimate governmental interest.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Warrants

HN11 [↓] Search & Seizure, Probable Cause

When reviewing a search authorization, an appellate court does not review a probable cause determination de novo; rather it assesses whether the authorizing official had a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed. A substantial basis exists when, based on the totality of the circumstances, a common-sense judgment would lead to the conclusion that there is a fair probability that evidence of a crime will be found at the identified location. The magistrate's probable cause determination is given great deference because of the Fourth Amendment's strong preference for searches conducted pursuant to a warrant. Nonetheless, this deference is not boundless, and a reviewing court may conclude that the magistrate's probable-cause determination reflected an improper analysis of the totality of the circumstances. Probable cause requires the demonstration of a sufficient nexus between the alleged crime and the specific item to be seized. In conducting this review, we look to the information that the authorizing official had at the time he made his decision.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Probable Cause

HN12 [↓] Search & Seizure, Probable Cause

An appellate court ordinarily affords the magistrate's determination of probable cause great deference, but there are three exceptions to this general rule: (1) when the affidavit upon which the determination was based was prepared with knowing or reckless falsity; (2) when the magistrate is not neutral and detached or is serving as a rubber stamp for the police; or (3) when the affidavit fails to provide a substantial basis for a finding of probable cause or the determination is a mere ratification of the bare conclusions of others.

Searches conducted after obtaining a warrant or authorization based on probable cause are presumptively reasonable whereas warrantless searches are presumptively unreasonable unless they fall within a few specifically established and well-delineated exceptions.

HN14 [↓] In regards to how to treat erroneous information in an affidavit, a court must sever misstatements or improperly obtained information from an affidavit and examine the remainder of the affidavit to determine if probable cause still exists.

Constitutional Law > ... > Fundamental Rights > Search & Seizure > Scope of Protection

Military & Veterans Law > Military Justice > Search & Seizure > Searches Requiring Probable Cause

HN15 [↓] Search & Seizure, Scope of Protection

There must be specificity in the scope of a warrant which, in turn, mandates specificity in the process of conducting the search. Practitioners must generate specific warrants and search processes necessary to comply with that specificity and then, if they come across evidence of a different crime, stop their search and seek a new authorization.

HN16 [↓] Search & Seizure, Plain View

The plain view doctrine may not be used to extend a general exploratory search from one object to another until something incriminating at last emerges. Under in order for the plain view exception to apply: (1) the officer must not violate the Fourth Amendment in arriving at the spot from which the incriminating materials can be plainly viewed; (2) the incriminating character of the materials must be immediately apparent; and (3) the officer must have lawful access to the object itself.

Evidence obtained as a result of an unlawful search is inadmissible against the accused if the accused: (1) makes a timely objection; (2) has an adequate interest, such as a reasonable expectation of privacy, in the person, place, or property searched; and (3) exclusion of such evidence results in appreciable deterrence of future unlawful searches and the benefits of such deterrence outweigh the costs to the justice system. Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Exclusionary Rule > Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule > Reasonable Reliance Upon Warrant

HN18 Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule, Good Faith

For the good faith exception to apply, the Government must establish that law enforcement's reliance on a defective authorization is objectively reasonable. The Government has the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence the following: (1) the seizure resulted from a search and seizure authorization issued, in relevant part, by a magistrate; (2) the magistrate had a substantial basis for determining probable cause existed; and (3) law enforcement reasonably and in good faith relied on the authorization. Mil. R. Evid. 311(c)(3), (d)(5)(A). The second requirement is met if the person executing the search had an objectively reasonable belief that the magistrate had a substantial basis for determining the existence of probable cause. The question is whether a reasonably well trained officer would have known that the search was illegal in light of all of the circumstances. Courts further consider the objective reasonableness, not only of the officers who eventually executed a warrant, but also of the officers who originally obtained it or who provided information material to the probable-cause determination.

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Exclusionary Rule > Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule > Reasonable Reliance Upon Warrant

Criminal Law & Procedure > ... > Exclusionary Rule > Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule > Scope of Exceptions

HN19 Exceptions to Exclusionary Rule, Good Faith

There are four circumstances in which the good faith exception will not apply: (1) where the magistrate was misled by information in an affidavit that the affiant knew was false or would have known was false except for his reckless disregard of the truth; (2) where the magistrate wholly abandoned his judicial role; (3) where the warrant was based on an affidavit so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable; and (4) where the warrant is so facially deficient in failing to particularize the place to be searched or the things to be seized that the executing officers cannot reasonably presume it to be valid.

The fact that a Fourth Amendment violation occurred—i.e., that a search or arrest was unreasonable—does not necessarily mean that the exclusionary rule applies. Indeed, exclusion has always been the last resort, not the first impulse, and precedents establish important principles that constrain application of the exclusionary rule. The exclusionary rule is not an individual right and applies only where it results in appreciable deterrence.

Opinion

A general court-martial composed of a military judge sitting alone found Appellant guilty, consistent with his pleas, of one specification of attempted receipt of child pornography and two specifications of attempted sexual abuse of a child, in violation of Article 80, Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), 10 U.S.C. § 880; and one specification of possession of child pornography and one specification of producing or transmitting [*2] child pornography as assimilated under 18 U.S.C. § 2251, both in violation of Article 134, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 934. Contrary to his pleas, the military judge found Appellant guilty of one specification of attempting to patronize a prostitute, in violation of Article 80, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 880;¹ one charge and specification of sexual assault in violation of Article 120, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 920; and one charge and one specification of receiving obscene visual depictions of a minor, as assimilated under 18 U.S.C. § 1466A, in violation of Article 134, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 934.² Appellant was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge, confinement for 14 years and 6 months, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduction to the grade of E-1, and a reprimand. The convening authority took "no action" on the adjudged sentence.³

Appellant raises five issues on appeal: (1) whether the military judge erred in denying a defense motion to suppress evidence; (2) whether Appellant's speedy trial rights under the Sixth Amendment⁴ and Rule for Courts-Martial (R.C.M.) 707 were violated; (3) whether Appellant is entitled to appropriate relief due to the convening authority's failure to take action on his sentence as required by law; (4) whether the Government was preempted from [*3] charging an assimilated Article 134, UCMJ, offense, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1466A, because prosecution for conduct of this nature is preempted by the enumerated Article 134, UCMJ, offense of receiving child pornography; and (5) whether the language used by the convening authority in Appellant's reprimand made his sentence inappropriately severe.⁵ After careful consideration, regarding the part of issue (2) concerning whether Appellant's Sixth Amendment rights were violated, and issues (3) and (5), we have determined those issues do not warrant further discussion nor relief.⁶ See United States v. Matias, 25 M.J. 356, 361 \(C.M.A. 1987\). With regard to the remaining issues, we find no prejudicial error to a substantial right of Appellant, and we affirm the findings and sentence.

² All references in this opinion to the punitive articles of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), are to the Manual for Courts-Martial, United States (2016 ed.). The charges and specifications were referred to trial after 1 January 2019; as such, all other references to the UCMJ and Rules for Courts-Martial (R.C.M.) are to the Manual for Courts-Martial, United States (2019 ed.). See Exec. Order 13,825, §§ 3 and 5, 83 Fed. Reg. 9889, 9890 \(8 Mar. 2018\).

³ In the convening authority Decision on Action memorandum, dated 22 August 2019, the convening authority denied Appellant's request for deferment of reduction in rank. Appellant was beyond the expiration of his term of service when the convening authority denied Appellant's request for waiver of automatic forfeitures of pay.

⁴ U.S. Const. amend. VI.

⁵ Appellant personally raised issues (4) and (5) pursuant to United States v. Grostefon, 12 M.J. 431 \(C.M.A. 1982\).

⁶ Regarding issue (2), we find Appellant's Sixth Amendment rights were not violated. Regarding issue (3), consistent with the respective opinions of the judges of this panel in United States v. Barrick, No. ACM S32579, 2020 CCA LEXIS 346 \(A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 30 Sep. 2020\) (unpub. op.), and subsequent opinions, we find no error in the convening authority's decision to "take no action on the sentence in this case."

I. BACKGROUND

KL met Appellant in either late March 2017 or early April 2017 on the social media dating application, Tinder, and later the two began text messaging before eventually meeting in person. Approximately a week after meeting Appellant in person, KL and Appellant entered into a sexual relationship. As their relationship progressed, KL stated her sexual experiences with Appellant became rougher and more aggressive. When things would get to be too rough, KL would [*4] let Appellant know by telling him "no" or "stop." According to KL, Appellant would respect her wishes when this occurred. However, at the end of April 2017, KL decided to end the sexual aspect of her relationship with Appellant when she started dating someone else.

On 11 May 2017, Appellant sent KL a text message stating he needed to talk. KL found his text message concerning, as Appellant had previously confided in her of some suicidal ideations. KL went to Appellant's house and talked with Appellant on his bed about a new relationship Appellant had entered and how he "wasn't receiving certain things in his [new] relationship and he was unhappy about that." After talking for about five minutes, Appellant pushed KL on to the bed, took off her pants, and inserted his penis in KL's vagina. KL told Appellant "no" and tried to push him off her; however, Appellant did not stop. KL testified Appellant pinned her wrists down and stated, "Keep fighting me, b*tch." After five or six minutes, Appellant ejaculated in KL. After he finished, Appellant asked KL, "Did I do what I think I just did?" KL responded, "Yes," put her clothes on, and left Appellant's residence.

Later that day, Appellant sent [*5] KL a message through Snapchat, a social media messaging application, telling KL that, "We need a safety word []. That was 100 not okay. I feel terrible." After Appellant's message, KL responded:

[KL:] It's okay. You didn't know.

[Appellant:] Probably part of why I reacted that way after[.] And yes I did know! You said no!

[KL:] /:

[Appellant:] I'm so sorry [KL]... I understand if you can't even look at me right now, that was so f*cked up.

[KL:] Don't apologize. It's fine.

[Appellant:] Are you absolutely sure you're ok?

[KL:] Not absolutely but I'll be fine.

KL stated she sent this message because she "didn't want to come to terms quite yet with what happened, and [she] just wanted to get the conversation over with."

On 26 May 2017, KL reported to the Box Elder (South Dakota) Police Department (BEPD) (near Ellsworth Air Force Base, South Dakota), that she had been sexually assaulted by Appellant. The Air Force Office of Special Investigations (AFOSI) was notified by BEPD of the allegation, and after obtaining jurisdiction, agents opened an investigation. AFOSI agents reviewed KL's cell phone, and saw the text messages and Snapchat messages exchanged between KL and Appellant.

On 16 June 2017, [*6] Appellant was interviewed by AFOSI agents. After being advised by Special Agent (SA) CR that he was suspected of sexual assault and read his rights under Article 31, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 831, Appellant acknowledged his rights and invoked his right to counsel. SA CR advised Appellant that AFOSI agents had received verbal authorization to seize Appellant's cell phone. Agents then asked Appellant if his phone was password protected. Appellant responded it was password protected. The agents then asked Appellant to disable the passcode on his cell phone, which Appellant did.⁷ The verbal authorization was later reduced to writing that same day. A search of Appellant's phone after the seizure revealed no additional misconduct, and AFOSI closed its investigation in August 2017.

One charge with a single specification alleging sexual assault was preferred against Appellant in October 2017. As trial counsel was preparing for Appellant's Article 32, UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. § 832, preliminary hearing, he interviewed KL and learned more about her communications with Appellant. In January 2018, the Government received a second search authorization to search Appellant's social media accounts, and after another search of Appellant's phone, [*7] alleged child pornography and obscene anime material were discovered. In February 2018, the Government sought and received a third search authorization, and sent the phone to the Department of Defense Cyber Crime Center/Cyber Forensics Laboratory (DC3/CFL). After the DC3/CFL forensic examiner discovered evidence of additional misconduct, in April 2018 the Government sought and received a fourth search authorization, and a subsequent search of Appellant's phone in April 2018 revealed additional misconduct, which indicated Appellant engaged in conversations with people of many different ages, and reached out to users he believed to be 15 to 17 years old. The April 2018 search revealed Appellant attempted to sexually abuse children, as he sent a photo of his penis to an individual who claimed to be a 15-year-old girl, and communicated indecent language to her, including sexually explicit language. Appellant engaged in another lewd conversation with another girl, whom he believed was 15 years of age, and sent her messages about his penis. There was also evidence Appellant possessed child pornography and that he patronized a prostitute.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Motion to Suppress Evidence

1. Additional [*8] Background⁸

a. The first search authorization (June 2017)

⁷ An AFOSI agent told Appellant, "[J]ust so you are fully aware on your rights on this, the passcode is going to be up to you whether or not you want to disable it . . . what it does is it saves us time in the long run, so if you disable it now, we can go from there . . . otherwise, we'll have to go back to the approval authority, we'll apply for . . . a compulsion letter and they will force you to unlock it. So it is whether or not you want to do it now or have us go through (becomes inaudible)."

⁸ The military judge made extensive findings of fact regarding this motion. Except as otherwise noted, this court adopts her findings of fact.

On 16 June 2017, another AFOSI agent, SA WV, submitted a written affidavit in support of an application to search and seize "[Appellant]'s cell phone for text message conversations between [Appellant] and [KL] from 1 May [20]17 to present." Specifically, the supporting affidavit stated that Appellant and KL met through the phone application, Tinder, and KL had screenshots of messages exchanged between herself and Appellant relevant to her sexual assault allegation.

According to SA CR, the purpose of the 16 June 2017 search authorization was to search for text messages between Appellant and KL and to corroborate what KL had provided to law enforcement. At the time, SA CR was under the impression that messages sent through Snapchat disappeared immediately after being read by the recipient, and he believed that Snapchat messages between Appellant and KL no longer existed. A local military magistrate, Lieutenant Colonel (Lt Col) KE, determined there was probable cause to believe that relevant communications were contained on Appellant's cell phone and authorized the search of Appellant's phone. This would be the first of the four search [*9] authorizations issued for Appellant's phone.

At the time of Appellant's AFOSI interview, the local AFOSI detachment was able to conduct an extraction of Appellant's phone using Cellebrite's Universal Forensic Extraction Device (UFED) only if the phone was unlocked or not password protected.⁹ After seizing Appellant's cell phone, a third AFOSI agent, SA MH, utilized Cellebrite software to conduct an extraction on 22 June 2017, limiting his search to the scope of the 16 June 2017 search authorization. The text messages extracted provided no evidence of other misconduct.¹⁰

Had Appellant not provided his passcode in June 2017, neither the local AFOSI detachment, nor DC3/CFL, had the capability to unlock Appellant's device in house. However, Cellebrite Advanced Services (CAS) had the ability to support "brute force identification" of the screen lock and extraction of the complete file system data on Appellant's cell phone seized by AFOSI. Since DC3/CFL did not have the capability to access such devices, it had a policy of asking the requesting agency if it wanted to pay for CAS to unlock a device. If the requesting agency approved and paid for the service, DC3/CFL then transported the relevant [*10] device to a local CAS office. DC3/CFL did not obtain CAS technology and proprietary software in its own facility until March 2018.¹¹ The local AFOSI detachment did not consult AFOSI's Digital Forensic Consultants (DFC), DC3/CFL, or Cellebrite regarding an extraction of Snapchat messages between Appellant and KL, nor was there a plan to consult those entities.

⁹The court takes judicial notice under Mil. R. Evid. 201(b)(2) that Cellebrite is a company that develops digital intelligence platforms. According to Cellebrite's website, a UFED is used to access digital device data and allows users to "bypass locks, perform advanced unlocks, perform logical/full file system/physical extractions, perform selective extraction of apps data and cloud tokens." Cellebrite UFED Product Overview, https://cf-media.cellebrite.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/06/ProductOverview_Cellebrite_UFED_A4.pdf (last visited 2 Apr. 2021).

¹⁰ According to SA CR, only text message communications were extracted.

AFOSI closed its investigation into Appellant's alleged sexual assault of KL in August 2017, distributed its report, and awaited case disposition. On 30 August 2017, the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces (CAAF) published United States v. Mitchell, holding that the Government violated the appellant's Fifth Amendment¹² rights (as protected by Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 101 S. Ct. 1880, 68 L. Ed. 2d 378 \(1981\)) when agents asked the appellant, in the absence of counsel, to enter his phone's passcode.¹³ 76 M.J. 413, 415 \(C.A.A.F. 2017\).

Prior to the Article 32, UCMJ, preliminary hearing, Captain (Capt) MM, a local judge advocate, interviewed KL; the primary trial counsel for the case, Capt MN, was not present for the interview because he was on temporary duty (TDY) at another installation. During this interview, KL said she and Appellant communicated primarily through Snapchat, and told counsel that she knew Appellant saved messages [*11] and pictures between the two of them because he "gray[ed] them out."¹⁴ Although she did not normally screenshot her messages or interactions with Appellant, KL had taken a screenshot of the Snapchat conversation with Appellant where he apologized for what he did.¹⁵

On 5 January 2018, the charge and specification relating to KL were referred to general court-martial. On 10 January 2018, after Capt MN returned from his TDY, he conducted another interview with KL, where she stated that Appellant used "a function on [S]napchat that allows a message to be locked and not disappear . . . [and] turn gray on her [S]napchat application." The Government wanted to find the Snapchat message saved between Appellant and KL on Appellant's cell phone, and concluded they needed to expand the June 2017 search authorization, as that authorization covered only "text messages" and not "other platforms."

b. The second search authorization (January 2018)

On 24 January 2018, AFOSI agents sought an expanded search authorization to search Appellant's cell phone for social media communications. SA CR also requested search authorization to look at screenshots, based on KL's interview with trial counsel. At this time, [*12] AFOSI agents remained focused on Appellant's alleged sexual assault of KL. That same day, SA CR submitted an affidavit in support of a second application to search "[Appellant's] cell phone for any communications between [Appellant] and [KL] from 1 May 2017 to 16 June 2017, to include any data stored on the phone from social media messaging applications and/or screenshots of such communications." On 24 January 2018 and based on SA CR's affidavit, a military magistrate, Colonel (Col) JN, found probable cause to search

¹² U.S. Const. amend. V.

¹³ Agents at the local Ellsworth AFB AFOSI detachment subsequently received training on how to move forward based on the new law.

¹⁵ The messages between Appellant and KL were highlighted in gray, which indicate that Appellant had saved the conversation. Accordingly, when KL opened the conversation in the application, the messages were saved and remained visible.

Appellant's cell phone, and authorized a written order for the search and seizure of Appellant's cell phone.¹⁶

Relying on the 24 January 2018 search authorization, on 29 January 2018, SA MH searched the saved images in the photographs folder on Appellant's cell phone to identify screenshots of Snapchat communications between Appellant and KL. The military judge found as fact that SA MH was "specifically looking at data previously pulled from [Appellant]'s cellular phone lawfully seized from [Appellant] in June 2017 for Snapchat messages that may have been saved as screen shots in the photograph folder on [Appellant]'s cell phone." While looking for screenshots of Snapchat [*13] messages in the folder, SA MH discovered "anime," or animated images of "children and adolescents performing various sexual acts or having various sexual acts performed on them in various poses of undress." Once he saw these images, SA MH contacted the legal office.¹⁷ He then drafted a new search authorization for the military magistrate and contacted DC3/CFL, as DC3/CFL was "better equipped to address suspected child pornography than AFOSI."

c. The third search authorization (February 2018)

On 2 February 2018, SA MH submitted another affidavit in support of a third search authorization, this time to search "[Appellant's] cell phone for any child pornography depicting animated or real children, [I]nternet search terms associated with child . . . pornography, and any social media communications with discussions or photographs related to child pornography." A military magistrate, Col JN, determined there was probable cause to believe there was relevant evidence on the phone of such content, and issued a written order authorizing the search. However, due to the local AFOSI detachment's limited inhouse capabilities, agents were unable to extract Snapchat messages or data from other social [*14] media applications from Appellant's phone as authorized by the military magistrate's February 2018 authorization. As a result, AFOSI agents sent Appellant's cell phone to DC3/CFL for further extraction and analysis.

On 20 March 2018, Mr. TH from DC3/CFL contacted AFOSI agents regarding the scope of the search of Appellant's cell phone. According to the DC3/CFL Form 1,¹⁸ Mr. TH was advised that the scope of the search was limited to communications between Appellant and KL during the time frame outlined in the January 2018 search authorization, to include communications via Snapchat and other social media applications. Government agents, both from the legal office and law enforcement, informed Mr. TH of the February 2018 search authorization regarding child pornography; however, the Government told Mr. TH it was not actively pursuing those allegations at the time based on what AFOSI uncovered and "that the February 2018 search authorization was not relevant." At the time Mr. TH received Appellant's cell phone in March 2018, DC3/CFL had obtained in-house CAS capability.

¹⁶ The military judge's ruling references the date of this search authorization as 28 January 2018. However, the date on the document is 24 January 2018.

The CAS system DC3/CFL used worked only if the cell phone was locked. The Cellebrite system would attempt a "brute force" [*15] identification, systematically attempting every possible four- or six-digit numerical combination until the passcode was identified. Therefore, to accomplish a full extraction of Appellant's cell phone, Mr. TH relocked Appellant's cell phone and set a personal identification number (PIN). Because Mr. TH entered the PIN into the Cellebrite system, he was able to successfully gain access on the first try. Mr. TH testified it would take the system no more than two days to identify an unknown PIN on Appellant's device, and because of a finite number of digit combinations, the chance of success was 100 percent. When asked by trial counsel if he ever had the passcode to Appellant's phone, he answered, "No," and stated he did not need it.

On 28 March 2018, while reviewing social media applications from 10 May 2017 to 12 May 2017 for deleted messages between KL and Appellant, Mr. TH discovered a chat thread on the social media application, Whisper, close in time to the alleged sexual assault. The message was between Appellant and "Nerd," who messaged Appellant, stating, "I'm only 15*!" Mr. TH saw Appellant had solicited this contact for photographs and that Appellant sent a photograph of his [*16] penis to "Nerd" via Whisper. Mr. TH did not continue his search because the conversation was not between KL and Appellant but relayed his discovery to the Government. Mr. TH noted that in his experience, "[P]eople migrate from one application to another and generally, they start on Whisper and then, they migrate into usually Snapchat or Kik [another social media application]; that's in every case I've ever worked with Whisper." Mr. TH further opined that it would be appropriate to open the images folder to look for communications because in his experience "[p]eople screenshot things all the time."

d. The fourth search authorization (April 2018)

On 2 April 2018, SA CR submitted another affidavit in support of a fourth search authorization to search "[Appellant's] cell phone for text or social media communications with purported minors to include sexual communications via text or photographs." A military magistrate, Lt Col KE, determined there was probable cause to believe that relevant communications were contained within the device, and issued a written search authorization.

On 19 April 2018, AFOSI agents initiated a new investigation into Appellant's conduct based on the evidence Mr. [*17] TH discovered. Specifically, AFOSI began its investigation based on evidence that Appellant requested and received nude images and engaged in sexually explicit conversations with a known minor, sent images of his genitalia, and engaged in sexual explicit conversations with a known minor and other individuals suspected to be minors.

e. Federal search authorization of Appellant's home and property

On 6 June 2018, agents from AFOSI submitted an affidavit to the United States District Court for the District of South Dakota in support of an application to search Appellant's off-base residence and seize certain property. That same day, a United States Magistrate Judge issued a search and seizure warrant for Appellant's property, including computer and electronic storage devices. On 7 June 2018, AFOSI agents conducted a search and seizure of Appellant's property.

2. Motion to Suppress

At trial, the Defense moved to suppress, on Fourth¹⁹ and Fifth Amendment grounds, all data, information, statements, and evidence that were obtained from the four searches of Appellant's cell phone. Trial defense counsel argued that Appellant's Fifth Amendment rights were violated when Appellant was asked to enter his cell phone's passcode after he [*18] had invoked his right to counsel and refused to answer questions posed to him by AFOSI agents. Trial defense counsel argued a Fourth Amendment violation arose from the Government's failure to establish probable cause for the second January 2018 search authorization, as the search authorization did not describe the scope of the search with sufficient particularity, and that the scope of the search was too broad. Trial defense counsel also challenged the fourth April 2018 search authorization, arguing that the inclusion of SA MH's observations from his January 2018 search in the affidavit was improper and was overly broad in expanding the search to "all social media communications." The military judge made two rulings to Appellant's motion to suppress. In her initial ruling of 13 June 2019, the military judge granted Appellant's motion to suppress in part, as to SA MH's 29 January 2018 search and the subsequent February 2018 search, but denied Appellant's remaining request for relief. After her initial ruling caused some confusion among the counsel, the military judge issued a supplemental ruling on 17 June 2019 to Appellant's motion to suppress, denying Appellant's motion to suppress the searches of [*19] his phone in full.

a. Military Judge's initial ruling

The military judge found that Appellant was in custody when he was interviewed by AFOSI agents, that he invoked his right to counsel, and that he needed to have an attorney present before AFOSI agents asked him to unlock his phone by entering his passcode. The military judge found that the agents violated Appellant's Fifth Amendment rights as protected by Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694 \(1966\), and Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 101 S. Ct. 1880, 68 L. Ed. 2d 378 \(1981\); however, she noted that the agents involved did not act in bad faith, and that Mitchell had not been decided at the time of the interrogation. 76 M.J. at 413.

The military judge found Appellant's phone was seized pursuant to lawful authorization prior to the Edwards violation, or any other Fifth Amendment violation, and the phone itself "d[id] not constitute evidence derived from the illicit interrogation." The military judge further found the contents of Appellant's phone were admissible, because the Government would have inevitably discovered the evidence, as agents "possessed, or were actively pursuing, evidence or leads that would have inevitably led to the discovery of the evidence in a lawful manner."

However, in this initial ruling, the military judge suppressed "the evidence resulting from SA MH's unlawful search [*20] on 29 January 2018 and the subsequent [third] 2 February 2018 search authorization."²⁰ She concluded that SA MH had looked at an extraction from Appellant's phone that was accessed through the AFOSI agents' June 2017 Mitchell violation,²¹ yet AFOSI agents "had not yet pursued avenues in which to overcome the initial Mitchell violation," and therefore SA MH was "not lawfully there despite attempting to follow a lawful search authorization."

In addressing whether probable cause existed to search Appellant's phone, specifically the January 2018 search authorization, the military judge concluded that law enforcement was not precluded from modifying the initial search authorization once "new evidence [wa]s presented to support a new search authorization." The military judge concluded the January 2018 search authorization was supported by probable cause and the military magistrate had a substantial basis for this determination. The military judge also concluded that the January 2018 search authorization was adequately scoped in time, type and individuals, and that law enforcement had not been given "carte blanche to rummage in [Appellant's] iPhone."

With respect to the 2 April 2018 [*21] search authorization, the military judge severed that provision of the AFOSI affidavit that included SA MH's discovery of animated images of underage females. She concluded the military magistrate had a substantial basis for determining probable cause existed to search Appellant's phone, even without the evidence proffered from SA MH's January 2018 search. Also, the military judge stated that Mr. TH, who was not present for the January 2018 search, limited his March 2018 search of Appellant's phone within the restraints of the January 2018 search authorization, and accessed the content of Appellant's phone "independently from the access achieved through AFOSI's initial Mitchell violation in June 2017." Also, given Mr. TH's professional experience, he established the necessary nexus required under the Fourth Amendment and case law between the type of crime, nature of items sought, and reasonable inferences about where evidence is likely to be kept. The military judge also found the scope of the military magistrate's search authorization was sufficiently tailored "to ensure that it was reasonable under the facts and circumstances in this case." Finally, the military judge found no evidence suggesting [*22] the military magistrate's April 2018 search authorization was "anything but impartial, neutral, and detached."

The military judge also found that inevitable discovery applied in this case, as the Government possessed, or was actively pursuing evidence or leads that would have inevitably led to the discovery of the evidence in a lawful manner. The military judge concluded AFOSI agents did not have the capability to extract Snapchat messages from Appellant's phone in reliance on the

²¹ The military judge's ruling refers to the "Mitchell violation" when the AFOSI agents asked Appellant to disable his passcode on his cell phone after invoking his right to counsel. According to her ruling, "At the moment when interrogation occurred, the violation of [Appellant's] rights under Edwards was complete."

January 2018 search authorization, so AFOSI agents needed to submit Appellant's phone to DC3/CFL for assistance in the extraction and analysis. Further, the military judge relied on Mr. TH's testimony that he "relocked" Appellant's cell phone in order for the program to work.

If Mr. [TH] had not relocked Appellant's phone (putting it in the same locked status prior to the June Mitchell violation), the Cellebrite software would not have extracted the data from [Appellant's] phone. Therefore, the data that Mr. [TH] searched on [Appellant]'s phone was accessed independently from [Appellant]'s Mitchell violation.

The military judge found "it was reasonable to conclude that AFOSI would have obtained a valid authorization [*23] from the military magistrate had they known their actions were unlawful."

Finally, the military judge concluded that even if this court found her ruling in error, the good faith exception applied to the January 2018 search authorization, as there was no evidence that AFOSI agents "intentionally or recklessly made false statements or omissions in the supporting affidavit." Additionally, in conducting a Mil. R. Evid. 311(a)(3) balancing test, the military judge found exclusion of the evidence would "not result in an appreciable deterrence of future unlawful searches," and to exclude the evidence would deter law enforcement "to do just what they did — continually seek expanded search authorization from a new neutral and detached military magistrate when new crimes were discovered during their lawful searches."

b. Military Judge's supplemental ruling

On 17 June 2019, after considering additional evidence and argument from counsel, the military judge issued a supplemental ruling on the motion to suppress, with the primary focus on the searches conducted by Mr. TH.

On 28 March 2018, Mr. TH conducted his analysis under the 24 January 2018 search authorization. Despite being told about the 2 February 2018 search authorization [*24] for child pornography, Mr. TH received specific instructions that the 2 February 2018 search authorization was not relevant to his search. The military judge specifically found as fact that although Mr. TH received the 2 February 2018 search authorization (on 11 April 2018), which authorized the search for child pornography and was based on SA MH's illegal search pursuant to the Mitchell violation, "[t]he only thing Mr. TH explicitly did under the 2 February 2018 search authorization was contact [the] National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC) to determine if [Appellant's] cellular phone had any files containing known child victims" of which there were no known victims in the files related to Appellant. The military judge found Mr. TH credible during his in-court testimony.

Without reliance on the evidence from SA MH's 29 January 2018 search or the February 2018 search authorization, and under the doctrine of "plain view," Mr. TH found evidence of the communications leading to "Nerd," who informed Appellant she was 15 years old, Mr. TH saw that Appellant solicited "Nerd" for photographs and sent her a photograph of his penis via Whisper. Mr. TH then followed up with [*25] AFOSI agents and sought guidance which resulted in the Government seeking the fourth, 2 April 2018, search authorization. Mr. TH received a copy of the search authorization the next day, and that search authorization allowed him to search Appellant's cell phone for "text or social media communication with purported minors to include sexual communications via text or photographs." Therefore, when Mr. TH reviewed Appellant's search history to determine if Appellant used Kik or Facebook, he was operating under the April 2018 search authorization.

The military judge once again concluded that inevitable discovery applied to the evidence discovered by Mr. TH, which led to the April 2018 search authorization. The military judge also found the plain view exception applied, given that Mr. TH was relying on the January 2018 and April 2018 search authorizations. Finally, the military judge applied the Mil. R. Evid. 311(a)(3) balancing test and determined that exclusion of the evidence would not result in appreciable deterrence of future unlawful conduct. The military judge therefore denied the defense's motion to suppress in full.²²

In charting how to apply the Fourth Amendment to searches of electronic devices, we glean from our reading of the case law a zone in which such searches are expansive enough to allow investigators access to places where incriminating materials may be hidden, yet not so broad that they become the sort of free-for-all general searches the Fourth Amendment was designed to prevent.

On one hand, it is clear that because criminals can—and often do—hide, mislabel, or manipulate files to conceal criminal activity, a broad, expansive search of the hard drive may be required. . . . On the other hand, . . . granting the Government a carte blanche to search every file on the hard drive impermissibly transforms a "limited search into a general one."

d. Plain View

California*, 496 U.S. 128, 136-37, 110 S. Ct. 2301, 110 L. e. Good Faith Exception and Exclusionary Rule

HN17^[↑] Evidence obtained as a result of an unlawful search is inadmissible against the accused if the accused: (1) makes a timely objection; (2) has an adequate interest, such as a reasonable expectation of privacy, in the person, place, or property searched; and (3) exclusion of such evidence "results in appreciable deterrence of future unlawful searches . . . and the benefits of such deterrence outweigh the costs to the justice system." Mil. R. Evid. 311(a)(3).

HN18^[↑] For the good faith exception to apply, the Government must establish that law enforcement's reliance on a defective authorization is "objectively reasonable." Hoffmann, 75 M.J. at 127 (citation omitted). The Government has the burden of establishing [*34] by a preponderance of the evidence the following: (1) the seizure resulted from a search and seizure authorization issued, in relevant part, by a magistrate; (2) the magistrate had a substantial basis for determining probable cause existed; and (3) law enforcement reasonably and in good faith relied on the authorization. Mil. R. Evid. 311(c)(3), (d)(5)(A); see also Nieto, 76 M.J. at 107 (citations omitted); Carter, 54 M.J. at 420 (citation omitted).

The second requirement is met if the person executing the search "had an objectively reasonable belief that the magistrate had a 'substantial basis' for determining the existence of probable cause." United States v. Perkins, 78 M.J. 381, 387 (quoting Carter, 54 M.J. at 422). The question is "'whether a reasonably well trained officer would have known that the search was illegal' in light of 'all of the circumstances.'" Herring v. United States, 555 U.S. 135, 145, 129 S. Ct. 695, 172 L. Ed. 2d 496 \(2009\) (quoting Leon, 468 U.S. at 922 n.23). We further "consider the objective reasonableness, not only of the officers who eventually executed a warrant, but also of the officers who originally obtained it or who provided information material to the probable-cause determination." Leon, 468 U.S. at 923 n.24.

HN19^[↑] The United States Supreme Court has identified four circumstances in which the "good faith exception" will not apply: (1) where the magistrate "was misled by information in an affidavit that the affiant knew was [*35] false or would have known was false except for his reckless disregard of the truth;" (2) where the magistrate "wholly abandoned his judicial role;" (3) where the warrant was based on an affidavit "so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable;" and (4) where the warrant is so "facially deficient . . . in failing to particularize the place to be searched or the things to be seized . . . that the executing officers cannot reasonably presume it to be valid." Id. at 923 (citations omitted). The CAAF has harmonized these four exceptions with the three requirements under Mil. R.

Evid. 311(c)(3) by finding Leon's first and third exceptions to be incorporated in Mil. R. Evid. 311(c)(3)'s second prong (magistrate having a substantial basis) and Leon's second and fourth exceptions to be incorporated in Mil. R. Evid. 311(c)(3)'s third prong (good-faith reliance on the search authorization). Carter, 54 M.J. at 421.

The Supreme Court spoke in detail on application of the exclusionary rule in Herring. The Court stated,

The fact that a Fourth Amendment violation occurred—i.e., that a search or arrest was unreasonable—does not necessarily mean that the exclusionary rule applies. HN20[↑] Indeed, exclusion "has always been our last resort, not our first impulse," [*36] and our precedents establish important principles that constrain application of the exclusionary rule. . . . [T]he exclusionary rule is not an individual right and applies only where it "result[s] in appreciable deterrence." We have repeatedly rejected the argument that exclusion is a necessary consequence of a Fourth Amendment violation. Instead we have focused on the efficacy of the rule in deterring Fourth Amendment violations in the future.

555 U.S. at 140-41 (second alteration in original) (citations omitted).

Regarding the deterrence of future unlawful searches, the benefits "must outweigh the costs." Id. at 141. The Supreme Court has never suggested that the exclusionary rule must apply in every circumstance in which it might provide marginal deterrence. [T]o the extent that application of the exclusionary rule could provide some incremental deterrent, that possible benefit must be weighed against [its] substantial social costs. The principal cost of applying the rule is, of course, letting guilty and possibly dangerous defendants go free—something that offends basic concepts of the criminal justice system. [T]he rule's costly toll upon truth-seeking and law enforcement objectives presents a high obstacle for those urging [its] application. [*37]

4. Analysis

We find that the facts articulated in the military judge's ruling on the motion to suppress were not clearly erroneous, and we find that her conclusions of law are correct.

At the time of Appellant's interview with the AFOSI agents, the CAAF had not yet decided Mitchell. However, there is no debate on the illegality of AFOSI agents asking Appellant to disable his passcode after he invoked his right to counsel. See Mitchell, 76 M.J. at 415. As such, the remaining issues are whether the military judge abused her discretion by finding the Government met its burden under the inevitable discovery doctrine, and if so, whether the good-faith exception would apply and whether the evidence should be excluded to deter future unlawful actions.

After the Mitchell violation, four searches of Appellant's phone occurred: in June 2017, when SA MH searched the contents after the first search authorization, and again in January 2018 after the second search authorization was granted; in March 2018, when Mr. TH searched the contents of Appellant's phone pursuant to the June 2017 and January 2018 search authorizations; and in April 2018, pursuant to [*38] to all search authorizations. As this court recently noted in United States v. Painter, under the inevitable discovery doctrine we must view the situation as if SA MH had never asked Appellant to input his passcode, or that Mr. TH had never had the passcode to disable the security feature on his smartphone. No. ACM 39646, 2020 CCA LEXIS 474, at *34 \(A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 23 Dec. 2020\) (unpub. op.) (citing United States v. Keller, No. ACM 37729, 2013 CCA LEXIS 665, at *11 \(A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 15 Jul. 2013\) (unpub. op.) ("This requires a court to view the situation as it existed at the instant before the unlawful search and determine what would have happened had that unlawful search not occurred.")). With that factual landscape, we must determine whether the military judge abused her discretion when she concluded that "the inevitable discovery exception applie[d] in this case," as the "Government possessed, or w[as] actively pursuing evidence or leads that would have inevitably led to the discovery of the evidence in a lawful manner had not the illegality occurred."

a. June 2017 Search

At the time of the first search of Appellant's phone, AFOSI agents possessed a search authorization, the validity of which Appellant has never contested. SA CR had possession of Appellant's smartphone, [*39] informed Appellant of the authorization, and then asked Appellant to unlock his smartphone and disable the password.

We agree with the military judge that the military magistrate had a substantial basis for finding probable cause to seize Appellant's phone. Acting on information obtained from KL, AFOSI agents sought search authorization from a military magistrate to search "[Appellant]'s cell phone for text message conversations between [Appellant] and [KL] from 1 May 2017 to present." The military magistrate had a substantial basis to grant the request to search, as AFOSI agents outlined why the information AFOSI was looking for would be found at the location they identified. This was a fairly narrow request, based on what KL disclosed to agents. The agents did not discover additional misconduct based on this search.

Appellant points out the AFOSI detachment lacked the capability to access locked phones, and at that time AFOSI did not communicate with DFC, Cellebrite, or DC3/CFL about whether those entities could access the phone in June 2017, and therefore, there was a possibility that a UFED extraction to recover the Snapchat messages would not have been successful. Yet, despite the [*40] lack of communications between those entities, the Government established it was ready and able to access Appellant's phone in June 2017. In her rulings on the June 2017 search of Appellant's phone, the military judge concluded "AFOSI possessed evidence of communications between [Appellant] and KL that AFOSI wanted to corroborate through evidence on [Appellant]'s phone." The investigation into KL's allegations was ongoing and developing, and given that AFOSI agents wanted to corroborate KL's messaging, SA CR's testimony that "he would have pursued every option to gain access" to Appellant's phone is credible. Finding a way to access Appellant's phone would have been a routine procedure for AFOSI agents, especially considering that the Government demonstrated that the phone could have been sent to CAS, which in June 2017 had the ability to unlock and access Appellant's phone. HN21^[↑] For inevitable discovery to apply, the Government must "demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that when the illegality occurred, the government agents possessed, or were actively pursuing, evidence or leads that would have inevitably led to the discovery of the evidence in a lawful manner." Mitchell, 76 M.J. at 420 (quoting Wicks, 73 M.J. at 103 [*41]). The Government met its burden of demonstrating by a preponderance of the evidence that the Government had the capability of unlocking Appellant's cell phone at the time the June 2017 illegality occurred.

b. 24 January 2018 Search Authorization and 29 January 2018 Search by Special Agent MH

The 24 January 2018 search authorization came about because trial counsel learned about KL and Appellant's social media communications. Trial counsel also learned that KL understood that Appellant had taken screenshots of his Snapchat messages to her because the messages he sent turned "gray." AFOSI agents were aware that KL and Appellant had communicated by Snapchat and Tinder, and therefore, when trial counsel sought this second search authorization, the agents were not presenting "new information" to the military magistrate.

Trial counsel recognized that the initial search authorization was too narrow and sought a broader authorization, to allow access to Appellant's social media applications and screenshots of communications. The search authorization was still fairly specific. It allowed the Government to search "[Appellant]'s cell phone for any communications between [Appellant] and [KL] from [*42] 1 May 2017 to 16 June 2017, to include any data stored on the phone from social media messaging applications and/or screenshots of such communications." We find no abuse of discretion by the military judge in concluding that the military magistrate, Col JN, had probable cause to grant the 24 January 2018 search authorization and expand the search of Appellant's phone, and that the search authorization was reasonably "scoped" and lawful. We also agree with the military judge that once law enforcement found new evidence to support this new search authorization, agents were not precluded from modifying the initial June 2017 search authorization.

While SA MH's 29 January 2018 search was based on this valid search authorization, he conducted the search on a phone that was only unlocked and accessible to them because of the Mitchell violation. As the military judge rightfully recognized, unlike with the June 2017 search, where agents were actively pursuing leads and would have taken steps to access Appellant's phone, there was no evidence or testimony to suggest the agents were pursuing ways to access the phone without the passcode from Appellant. However, we agree with the military judge [*43] that the actions of SA MH did not impact Mr. TH's access to the phone. Despite SA MH's illegal search pursuant to the June 2017 Mitchell violation, Mr. TH would have still discovered the obscene anime material, as he was searching within the confines of the 24 January 2018 search authorization. In other words, as the military judge alluded, SA MH's illegal search had no impact on the legal search conducted by Mr. TH and his inevitable discovery of the evidence. We find no abuse of discretion on the part of the military judge regarding her rulings on this issue.

c. 28 March 2018 Search by Mr. TH

Based on the additional information provided by KL about her communications with Appellant, AFOSI agents sought an expanded search authorization to examine the social media accounts on Appellant's phone. However, the military judge found that the AFOSI agents did not have the capability to extract the information they were looking for in reliance on the 24 January 2018 search authorization. We agree with the military judge in her initial ruling that in an effort to actively pursue evidence against Appellant, AFOSI agents "needed to submit" Appellant's phone to DC3/CFL for assistance to conduct [*44] an "extraction and analysis relevant to the sexual assault allegation."

Once Mr. TH received the phone, he relocked it to conduct a brute force identification and extraction of the phone's data using DC3/CFL's Cellebrite software. The military judge made a notable conclusion based on Mr. TH's testimony: "[H]ad [Mr. TH] not relocked [Appellant]'s phone (putting it in the same locked status prior to the June Mitchell violation), the Cellebrite software would not have extracted the data" from the phone. This showed "the data that Mr. [TH] searched on [Appellant]'s phone was accessed independently from [Appellant]'s Mitchell violation." Mr. TH's testimony that he was able to access Appellant's phone, with relative ease, supports the military judge's findings and conclusions on this issue.²³

After Mr. TH accessed Appellant's phone, he conducted his search within the narrow parameters of the June 2017 and January 2018 search authorizations. When Mr. TH discovered Appellant's conversations with minors in plain view, he did exactly what the law would expect of an investigator: he stopped his search and relayed his discovery to AFOSI.

The military judge also found that even though Mr. TH was aware [*45] that there was suspected child pornography (based on the February 2018 search authorization), Mr. TH searched Appellant's phone within the confines of the lawful 24 January 2018 search authorization. The military judge's conclusion is supported by Mr. TH sending the AFOSI agents an email, asking for clarification on the parameters of his search.

As our colleagues on this court noted in Painter,

In Mitchell, the CAAF concluded "the Government's eventual access to the phone's contents was not inevitable, but rather 'a matter of mere speculation and conjecture, in which [the Court] will not engage.'" Additionally, the majority in Mitchell specifically noted that the Government did not argue that a digital forensic examiner could have bypassed Mitchell's security. Id. at 420 n.8. That is not the case here—the Government clearly demonstrated that access to the pictures in the [] application was inevitable.

²³ Mr. TH testified his confidence level in being able to "crack" a six-digit pin code was "[o]ne hundred percent." Had he been given Appellant's phone without the passcode on 16 June 2017 when it was seized, he was "still one hundred percent confident" he would have been able to unlock it.

2020 CCA LEXIS 474 at *42 (first alteration in original) (citing Mitchell, 76 M.J. at 420) (quoting Maxwell, 45 M.J. at 422). Much like Painter, the Government, through Mr. TH's convincing and credible testimony, clearly demonstrated that access to Appellant's social media accounts was inevitable. As such, we find the military judge did not abuse her discretion [*46] by finding the Government demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that Mr. TH would have inevitably discovered the contraband on Appellant's phone during the 28 March 2018 search.

d. 2 April 2018 Search Authorization and Subsequent Search by Mr. TH

Based on Mr. TH's 28 March 2018 discovery, the Government sought a fourth search authorization, and, on 2 April 2018, was given authorization to search "[Appellant]'s cell phone for text or social media communications with purported minors to include sexual communications via text or photographs."

Trial defense counsel objected to the 2 April 2018 search authorization on the basis the affidavit supporting the request contained information that had been suppressed as a result of SA MH's illegal search. Finding that the affidavit did have tainted information regarding the obscene anime material relied upon by the military magistrate, the military judge determined whether probable cause existed after severing that information from the affidavit. The military judge found that even without SA MH's observations, the military magistrate would still have had a substantial basis for determining probable cause existed based primarily on Mr. TH's [*47] observations and experience, and because Mr. TH had lawfully accessed Appellant's phone.

Operating under two lawful search authorizations—the January 2018 and April 2018 search authorizations—the military judge found inevitable discovery would apply to Mr. TH's search. We agree. Mr. TH saw obscene anime material, child pornography, and other obscene materials. Mr. TH notified the Government, who then sent him the 2 February 2018 search authorization. As the military judge found, "[e]ven if the initial Mitchell violations had not occurred and he was not made aware of the 2 February 2018 search authorization, Mr. [TH] would have discovered the evidence that led to the 2 April 2018 search authorization." Mr. TH's testimony clearly showed that it was not until he had already discovered this evidence, lawfully, that Mr. TH took any steps in reliance on the 2 February 2018 search authorization. We agree with the military judge that even if Mr. TH had known the 2 February search authorization was partially unlawful, it is reasonable to assume that Mr. TH would still have taken the same steps to receive clarification and/or additional search authorizations upon the discovery of new evidence. [*48]

e. Good Faith

The military judge found that even if the military magistrate's 2 April 2018 search authorization was not supported by probable cause due in part to the disclosure of the obscene anime material, the good faith exception would apply. The military judge concluded that (1) the search of Appellant's phone was conducted pursuant to a properly issued search authorization in June 2017; (2) the military magistrate had a substantial basis upon which to find probable cause; (3) the agents relied on good faith based on the verbal and written search authorizations in conducting their search of Appellant's phone; and (4) there was no evidence that agents "intentionally or recklessly made false statements or omissions in the supporting affidavit." The evidence and testimony presented support the military judge's findings and conclusions on this issue, and this court specifically notes that every time additional evidence was discovered, AFOSI sought subsequent search authorizations. We also note the credible testimony from Mr. TH and the actions he took in executing the search authorizations. We find the military judge did not abuse her discretion in finding good faith would apply and [*49] that the requirements of Mil. R. Evid. 311(c)(3) were met.

f. Deterrence

Even if the above exceptions were not applicable in this case, applying the Mil. R. Evid. 311(a)(3) balancing test, we do not find the military judge abused her discretion in concluding that exclusion of the evidence obtained from Appellant's phone would not "result in an appreciable deterrence of future unlawful searches and seizures," and "the benefits of any such deterrence [did] not outweigh the costs to the justice system." Agents proactively sought search authorizations upon any indication that additional evidence against Appellant could be located, and Mr. TH's testimony shows that the evidence found on Appellant's phone would have been inevitably discovered even without Appellant's passcode. We have carefully considered the actions of the government agents with respect to searching Appellant's phone, and find their conduct does not warrant the severe reprimand of exclusion of evidence in this case. Having found a proper application of Mil. R. Evid. 311(c)(3), we find that the military judge did not abuse her discretion in denying Appellant's motion to suppress the contents of his phone.

B. Speedy Trial Pursuant to R.C.M. 707

1. Additional Facts

On 16 June 2017, AFOSI conducted its initial [*50] interview of Appellant. On 11 October 2017, a single charge was preferred for sexual assault of KL and on 5 January 2018, that charge was referred to general court-martial; however, upon the discovery of new evidence, on 26 April 2018, the convening authority withdrew and dismissed the charge and specification of sexual assault related to KL, "in order to provide an opportunity for revised charges to be preferred and considered for referral, if appropriate."

On 26 October 2018, three charges and seven specifications were preferred, including the initial charge related to KL. On 25 March 2019, two additional charges were preferred after the Article 32, UCMJ, preliminary hearing. On 8 April 2019, all charges and specifications were referred to general court-martial. Appellant was arraigned on 3 June 2019, and his trial began on 17 June 2019.

2. Law

HN22^[↑] "[W]hether an accused received a speedy trial is a legal question that is reviewed de novo." United States v. Leahr, 73 M.J. 364, 367 \(C.A.A.F. 2014\) (quoting United States v. Cooper, 58 M.J. 54, 58 \(C.A.A.F. 2003\)). A military accused may seek relief for alleged speedy trial violations under R.C.M. 707. See United States v. Tippit, 65 M.J. 69, 75 \(C.A.A.F. 2007\). "It is incumbent upon the government to arraign the accused within 120 days after the earlier of preferral of charges, the imposition of restraint, or entry [*51] on active duty. Where 'charges are dismissed . . . a new 120-day time period under this rule shall begin on the date of dismissal.' If charges are merely withdrawn and not subsequently dismissed, however, the R.C.M. 707 'speedy-trial clock continues to run.'" Leahr, 73 M.J. at 367 (omission in original) (citing United States v. Britton, 26 M.J. 24, 26 \(C.M.A. 1988\)).

3. Analysis

Appellant argues that he was not brought to trial within 120 days of preferral of charges, in violation of R.C.M. 707. A total of 221 days passed from when the charges were preferred on 26 October 2018 to 3 June 2019, when Appellant was arraigned. However, the convening authority excluded 118 days, upon request by both trial defense counsel due to their schedules.²⁴ Thus, taking into account the excluded time, only 103 days elapsed between preferral of charges and Appellant's arraignment, well within the 120-day period of the rule. Thus, we decline to grant relief on this issue.

C. Preemption and the Assimilated Article 134, UCMJ, Offense

1. Additional Facts

Additional Charge II and its specification alleged an assimilated offense under 18 U.S.C. § 1466A, Obscene visual representations of the sexual abuse of children, in violation of Article 134, UCMJ. The specification alleged that Appellant did, within the Continental United [*52] States, on or about 16 June 2017, knowingly receive obscene visual depictions of a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct, and such visual depictions were transported in interstate or foreign commerce by means of the internet, in violation of 18 U.S. Code 1466A, an offense not capital.²⁵

This charge was based on a 23-page anime story, which contained graphic drawings depicting a father sexually assaulting his daughter. The story included words, conversations, and word bubbles directly incorporated within the novel. During his testimony, Mr. TH outlined how Appellant knowingly received these obscene visual representations on his cell phone.

²⁴ The convening authority excluded 13 November 2018 to 20 January 2019 (69 days), and from 21 January 2019 to 10 March 2019 (49 days) from the speedy-trial calculation.

²⁵ Appellant visited the website associated with this charge the same day he was brought in by AFOSI for questioning and his cell phone seized, 16 June 2017.

2. Law

HN23^[↑] This court reviews questions of preemption de novo. United States v. Benitez, 65 M.J. 827, 828 (A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 2007) (citations omitted). "The preemption doctrine prohibits application of Article 134 to conduct covered by Articles 80 through 132." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also United States v. Johnston, No. ACM 39075, 2017 CCA LEXIS 715, at *4 (A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 16 Nov. 2017) (unpub. op.) (citing Manual for Courts-Martial, United States (2016 ed.), pt. IV, ¶ 60.c.(5)(a)).

In United States v. Kick, our superior court's predecessor, the United States Court of Military Appeals, defined the preemption doctrine as the legal concept that where Congress has occupied [*53] the field of a given type of misconduct by addressing it in one of the specific punitive articles of the code, another offense may not be created and punished under Article 134, UCMJ, by simply deleting a vital element. However, simply because the offense charged under Article 134, UCMJ, embraces all but one element of an offense under another article does not trigger operation of the preemption doctrine. In addition, it must be shown that Congress intended the other punitive article to cover a class of offenses in a complete way.

7 M.J. 82, 85 (C.M.A. 1979) (citations omitted); see also United States v. Erickson, 61 M.J. 230, 233 (C.A.A.F. 2005); United States v. Hill, No. ACM 38848, 2016 CCA LEXIS 291, at *2-3 (A.F. Ct. Crim. App. 9 May 2016) (unpub. op).

HN24^[↑] Accordingly, the preemption doctrine only precludes prosecution under Article 134, UCMJ, where two elements are met: "(1) 'Congress intended to limit prosecution for . . . a particular area' of misconduct 'to offenses defined in specific articles of the Code,' and (2) 'the offense charged is composed of a residuum of elements of a specific offense.'" United States v. Curry, 35 M.J. 359, 360-61 (C.M.A. 1992) (omission in original) (quoting United States v. McGuinness, 35 M.J. 149, 151-52 (C.M.A. 1992)); see also United States v. Wright, 5 M.J. 106, 110-11 (C.M.A. 1978).

HN25^[↑] To be guilty of receipt of a child pornography offense under 18 U.S.C. § 1466A, Appellant must have knowingly received an obscene "visual depiction of any kind, including a drawing, cartoon, sculpture or [*54] painting, that depicts a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct," provided the depiction had been mailed, shipped, or transported in interstate commerce by any means, including a computer. 18 U.S.C. §§ 1466A(a)(1), (d). The court notes that the enumerated offense under Article 134, UCMJ, for "receipt of child pornography" has a maximum punishment of 10 years of confinement, whereas the assimilated offense under 18 U.S.C. § 1466A carries a maximum confinement period of 20 years.²⁶

²⁶ Violations under 18 U.S.C. § 1466A are subject to the penalties provided in 18 U.S.C. § 2252A(b)(2), which states that whoever violates that statute

3. Analysis

Appellant argues that by assimilating 18 U.S.C. § 1466A instead of charging Appellant under the enumerated Article 134, UCMJ, offense of receipt of child pornography, the Government "unlawfully and improperly subverted the intent of Congress and the President in creating the enumerated offense of 'receipt of child pornography' under Article 134, thereby preempting other charging assimilative methods." Appellant further argues that the Government's [*55] charging scheme "unlawfully exaggerate[d] the criminality of Appellant's misconduct through unreasonable multiplications of charges and multiplicitous charging" and "unlawfully inflated Appellant's sentencing exposure."

In Hill, this court specifically addressed whether the preemption doctrine applied to the enumerated offense of child pornography under Article 134, UCMJ, and opined, [b]oth the Manual and Kick rely on an analysis of the power of the executive branch to act "where Congress has occupied the field." By contrast, the enumerated offense of child pornography was promulgated by the President. Accordingly, the preemption doctrine as described in the Manual and Kick does not apply.

2016 CCA LEXIS 291 at *5. That is, the preemption doctrine does not prohibit the Government from charging a Clause 3, Article 134, UCMJ, offense for receipt of obscene visual representations of the sexual abuse of children through interstate commerce solely because the President has enumerated a different offense involving receipt of child pornography under Article 134, UCMJ. Even if we found the preemption doctrine applied to enumerated offenses under Article 134, UCMJ, we would still conclude that Additional [*56] Charge II and its specification is not a residuum of the enumerated offense of receipt of child pornography.

III. CONCLUSION

The findings and sentence entered are correct in law and fact, and no error materially prejudicial to the substantial rights of Appellant occurred. Articles 59(a) and 66(d), UCMJ, 10 U.S.C. §§ 859\(a\), 866\(d\). Accordingly, the findings and the sentence are AFFIRMED.
